Case No.: CV2021-052893

MOTION TO DISMISS/MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS
OF PLAINTIFF'S ABORTION
COERCION CLAIM

(Assigned to the Hon. Alison Bachus)

16
17 Defendant, GREGORY GILLESPIE, by and through undersigned counsel, hereby 18 respectfully moves to dismiss the allegation of “abortion coercion” contained in Plaintiff’s
19 Complaint pursuant to 12(b)(6) and 12(b)(7), and as a Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings
20 pursuant to 12(c), Arizona Rules of Civil Procedure (A.R.C.P.). This Court denied a prior 21 Motion to Dismiss on December 14, 2021, for a failure by Defendant to consult with Plaintiff
22 pursuant to Rule 12(j) and to allege Plaintiff’s Complaint did not contain facts warranting relief
23 under any interpretation. This current Motion differs significantly from the previous, as it is 24 confined to a particular statute cited to by Plaintiff in her Complaint and contains allegations
25 that the court must adjudicate pursuant to A.R.C.P. 12(b)(6), and (7). Attached to this Motion
26
27
28

1 is a Good Faith Consultation Certificate as required by Rules 7.1(h) and 12(j). As and for his
2 Motion, Mr. Gillespie states and alleges as follows:

3 ARGUMENT

4 Plaintiff alleges three (3) counts for relief in her Complaint: (1) A.R.S. § 13-3601
5 (which she voluntarily dismissed upon learning that Title 13 does not create civil causes of 6 action); (2) A.R.S. § 36-2153 (abortion conducted without informed consent); and (3) the tort 7 of intentional infliction of emotional distress.

10 Plaintiff's claim for relief under A.R.S. § 36-2153 fails because the statute does not 11 create a cause of action for any of Defendant's conduct alleged in the Complaint. Moreover, to 12 the extent the statute creates a cause of action, such action may only be brought against a 13 person who conducts an abortion without informed consent (which the statute defines precisely 14 and at great length in a manner unrelated to any of Defendant's alleged conduct). No such 15 person is joined in this action, nor does Plaintiff allege that any person other than herself
16 performed or induced an abortion as defined in the statute.

19 I. Plaintiff's Complaint fails to state a claim for which relief can be granted.

20 "Abortion coercion" claim

21 Statutory language

22 Plaintiff alleges that Defendant has violated A.R.S. § 36-2153(G). This subsection 23 states, in its first sentence, "A person shall not intimidate or coerce in any way any person to 24 obtain an abortion." This provision does not contain any further explanation of what 25 "intimidate or coerce in any way" means in this context, nor does it state that a person who 26 does those things is liable for damages. It does not on its face create a cause of action for 27
28

1 damages against Defendant. The remainder of subsection G goes on to state that a parent
2 cannot coerce a minor to obtain an abortion, then prescribes certain remedies for a minor
3 whose parents deny her financial support due to the minor’s refusal to have an abortion
4 performed. Again, nothing in subsection G or the statute defines intimidation or coercion, nor 5 does any part of the statute expressly state a cause of action for intimidation or coercion.

7 In matters of statutory interpretation, the court must read the entire statute and interpret
8 each term within the context of its accompanying provisions.<sup>1</sup> When a statute expressly lists
9 things of a class, unlisted members or objects of the same class must be excluded absent
10 language to the contrary (e.g., “including but not limited to”).<sup>2</sup>
11

12 In § 36-2153, there are several such lists. The statute lists information that a physician 13 who is to perform an abortion must provide to the woman receiving the abortion, orally and in 14 person at least 24 hours before the procedure. § 36-2153(A)(1)(a)-(g). The statute lists 15 additional information that must be given, orally and in person at least 24 hours before the 16 procedure, by the physician or a qualified professional to whom the responsibility has been 17 delegated. Id. at § (A)(2)(a)-(h). The statute then lists other requirements for receiving and 18 documenting the patient’s informed consent, including information about the drug mifepristone
19 and the medical indications supporting an emergency procedure (if applicable). Id. at § (B)-
20 (C). Then, the statute instructs the department of health services to establish and maintain a 21 website with an enumerated list of information to be kept and made available. Id. at § (D)(1)- 22 (8). Later, the statute identifies people who may file a civil action under the statute and the

2 that the claim is based on failure to obtain informed consent before performing an abortion. Id.
3 at (K)(1)-(3) and (L)(1)-(3).

5 The statute does not create a cause of action against a person who did not perform an 6 abortion without informed consent. A.R.S. § 36-2153 does create a cause of action under 7 subsection K, specifically for a woman, the father of the unborn child, or a maternal 8 grandparent to recover against a physician who performed an abortion without informed 9 consent, as defined by subsection A (detailed above). Subsection K provides:
10

11 “K. In addition to other remedies available under the common or statutory law of this 12 state, any of the following may file a civil action to obtain appropriate relief for a 13 violation of this section: 1. A woman on whom an abortion has been performed without 14 her informed consent as required by this section.”

15 Two other statutes in Title 36, Chapter 20 impose other requirements relating to 16 informed consent, all of which are acts and conditions required of the provider. See A.R.S. §§ 17 36-2156 and 36-2158. In fact, every statute in the chapter describes requirements for medical 18 providers—not private citizens.
19

20 Statutory interpretation

21 The plain language of the statute limits the cause of action to the conduct the statute
22 requires of medical providers conducting abortion procedures. The only express claims it 23 creates are for the woman, the father, or a maternal grandparent to sue the provider who 24 performed an abortion without informed consent. Every cognizable claim under the operative 25 sections of the statute require that an abortion was conducted without informed consent, and 26 the duty to obtain and keep record of informed consent rests squarely on the physician. The 27
28

1 statute cannot be reasonably read in any way except that relief must be sought from the 2 physician who performed the abortion. Because the cause of action arises from an abortion
3 conducted without informed consent, and the statute’s definition of informed consent refers
4 entirely to acts the provider must undertake, there is simply no cause against a private citizen
5 unless they performed an abortion procedure (an act that is prohibited by A.R.S. § 36-2155).

7         The remedy, if there is one, cannot come from Defendant because he did not perform or 8 induce an abortion without informed consent. He cannot do so, nor does the Complaint allege 9 that he did. Moreover, he has no duty to engage in any of the acts required by the statute (or 10 any other statute in Title 36, Chapter 20). The Complaint asserts that Plaintiff obtained
11 “abortion pills” (Complaint at 28, ¶ 16), administered the first pill not in Defendant’s presence
12 (¶ 18), administered the second pill a day later outside of Defendant’s presence (¶ 21),
13 administered the second pill again two days after that outside of Defendant’s presence 14 (Complaint at 29, ¶ 24), administered the first pill again four days after that outside of 15 Defendant’s presence (Complaint at 30, ¶ 36), and finally administered the second pill for a 16 third time (the only relevant act in Defendant’s presence) another day after that (¶ 40). Plaintiff
17 alleges in the Complaint that she undertook at least five affirmative acts inducing an abortion
18 outside of Defendant’s presence and another affirmative act in his presence but does not allege 19 that Defendant performed or induced an abortion. None of the conduct alleged against 20 Defendant constitutes performing or inducing an abortion, nor does the Complaint allege 21 Defendant had a duty or failed to comply with the statute’s informed consent requirements.
22
24

26         Therefore, even accepting all material facts pled by Plaintiff as true for purposes of 27 adjudicating the pleadings, she “would not be entitled to relief under any interpretation of the 28

1 facts susceptible of proof.” Fid. Sec. Life Ins. Co. v. State Dep’t of Ins., 191 Ariz. 222, 224
2 (1998). This is because the statute simply does not contemplate the relief she is requesting.

3 Intimidation or coercion

4 Assuming, arguendo, that the statute creates an independent cause of action in the 5 absence of a defendant performing an abortion without informed consent, the only remotely
6 cognizable claim is that a person’s intimidation or coercion forced someone to perform or 7 induce an abortion. As discussed in the previous section, Plaintiff undertook all of the 8 affirmative acts that she alleges resulted in the termination of her pregnancy and did so almost 9 entirely outside of Defendant’s presence. Her Complaint does not state that Defendant coerced 10 her, but rather that she terminated the pregnancy “for the sake of a relationship with 11 Defendant” (Complaint at 30, ¶¶ 42 and 46). Therefore, taking the facts alleged in the 12 Complaint as true, Plaintiff herself asserts that she chose to terminate the pregnancy based on 13 the belief that she could continue to have a relationship with Defendant. In the light most 14 favorable to her, it could be surmised that Plaintiff means to claim that she relied on promises
15 from Defendant; accordingly, the question is whether promises qualify as intimidation or 16 coercion in this context.
17
18
19
20

21 Title 36 does not define intimidation or coercion, but the terms are used in other statutes 22 with specific meanings. A.R.S. § 13-1202, a criminal statute, defines intimidation as 23 intimidating, by words or conduct, to injure someone or cause serious damage to their 24 property, to cause serious public inconvenience such as evacuation of a building, or to injure or 25 damage the property of another person to assist in a criminal street gang, syndicate, or 26 racketeering enterprise. A.R.S. § 13-1307, the criminal sex trafficking statute, defines coercion
27
28

1 as threatening to abuse the law, making a passport or other government identification
2 inaccessible to its owner, extortion, causing or threatening financial harm, or facilitating or 3 controlling a person’s access to a controlled substance. The Complaint does not allege that 4 Defendant did any of these things.

6 Defendant cannot find any legal support for Plaintiff’s position that offering to remain
7 in a relationship with someone if they terminate their pregnancy is intimidating or coercive.
8 The acts she alleges—that Defendant promised he would work toward a marriage and 9 eventually have a child with her (Complaint at 28, ¶ 13), attend an event with her (Id. at 29, ¶
10 29), wanted to start a family with her (Id.), wanted to meet her father (Id.), “support her after 11 this” and “begin their relationship” (¶ 32)—are not even remotely of the kind of words or 12 conduct that Arizona law elsewhere defines as intimidation or coercion. The only acts in the 13 Complaint that might come close are the alleged threats to “go public with Plaintiff’s abortion”
14 to damage her reputation (¶ 44), but that is alleged to have occurred after Plaintiff’s actions to 15 abort the pregnancy and is therefore temporally excluded. Again, assuming all the facts alleged 16 in the Complaint are true, there is no conceivable claim for which relief can be granted.
17
19

20 II. Plaintiff failed to join a necessary party to recover for an abortion without 21 informed consent.

22 Because Plaintiff’s A.R.S. § 36-2153 claim can only be remedied through a cause of 23 action against the physician who performed the abortion without her “informed consent”—or is 24 at least predicated on the requirement that an abortion without informed consent actually 25 happened—Plaintiff has failed to join a necessary party. A.R.S. § 36-2153 imposes an 26 affirmative duty on the physician performing the abortion to obtain the qualifying individual’s 27 informed consent. Under Rule 19(a)(1)(A), the physician who performed the abortion on 28

1 Plaintiff must be joined because the court cannot accord complete relief—or any relief for that
2 matter—among the existing parties.

3 Even if Defendant’s actions did create an actionable claim for an abortion without 4 informed consent, the Complaint must necessarily be against both the Defendant and whoever
5 “performed or induced” the abortion. The provider who conducted the procedure or, as here, 6 authorized Plaintiff’s use of abortion-inducing medication has the duty to receive and 7 document informed consent. If Plaintiff acquired the medications—which she administered six 8 times—without consulting a medical provider, then there is no intervening party who could 9 have received informed consent. Paradoxically, the only person who could have ensured
10 informed consent would then have been Plaintiff herself. Because that would clearly not be a 11 cognizable claim, the Complaint would have to be dismissed outright. In the alternative, if 12 Plaintiff did receive authorization from a physician and now alleges the abortion was 13 performed or induced without her informed consent, then relief can only be afforded if that 14 physician is joined as a party. After all, their intervening breach of duty proximately caused the 15 alleged harm. The physician, if there is one, must be at least partially liable under the statute 16 and share in the attribution of fault or indemnify Defendant. Plaintiff has failed to join the 17 physician as a necessary party to the litigation, making it impossible for this court to adjudicate
18 the A.R.S. § 36-2153 claim.
19
20
21
22
23

24 III. A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) is unconstitutional.

25 The statute here cited in support of Plaintiff’s Complaint is unconstitutional as applied 26 to Defendant. If the statute creates the cause of action Plaintiff alleges, then it acts as an 27 impermissible content-based prior restraint on speech in violation of the First Amendment to 28

1 the United States Constitution. Furthermore, the statute violates the due process clause of the 2 Fourteenth Amendment because it is impossible to determine what acts a person must not do to 3 avoid liability.

4 A. A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) violates the First Amendment.

5 a. A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) acts as a prior restraint on free speech.

7 The First Amendment guarantees citizen’s the right to freedom of speech and, through 8 the Fourteenth Amendment, this right is protected against state action.<sup>3</sup> A statute acts as a prior 9 restraint on freedom of speech when it suppresses “the precise freedom which the First 10 Amendment sought to protect against abridgment.”<sup>4</sup> The Supreme Court of the United States 11 has held there is a “heavy presumption” against the constitutionality of prior restraints on 12 expression.<sup>5</sup> Reasonable restrictions on “time, place, or manner” of protected speech are not 13 prior restraints.<sup>6</sup>

15
16 Here, A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) seeks to prevent individuals from expressing their opinion or 17 belief about abortion with no regard to time, place, or manner. The relevant sentence of the 18 statute, which prohibits a person from certain speech at any time and in front of any person, 19 acts as a prior restraint on speech that the Constitution would otherwise protect. Discussing 20 abortion law in front of a pregnant woman could be construed to be prohibited under the 21 statute. Discussing abortion procedures or the risks of full-term pregnancy at a medical 22 symposium could be prohibited. Expressing one’s personal opinion about the morality of 23 abortion in a private conversation—e.g., “I believe that bearing an unwanted child who the

1 parents cannot support is unethical”—could be construed to violate the statute. All that would 2 be required is that the speech “intimidates” or “coerces” a person “in any way” to receive an
3 abortion. Because those terms are so impenetrably broad—discussed further below—the only 4 guaranteed way to avoid potential liability is to remain silent. That is the textbook definition of 5 prior restraint and plainly violates the Constitution.

7 A person’s right to express their views without fear of liability is precisely the freedom
8 the First Amendment is designed to protect.<sup>7</sup> The Supreme Court held this right can only be 9 restricted in a few, limited circumstances, such as when the words themselves are “inherently 10 likely to provoke a violent reaction.”<sup>8</sup> Two individual parties privately discussing how to 11 proceed with a pregnancy cannot be prohibited in the manner the statute purports.
12

14 b. A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) is void for vagueness.<sup>9</sup>

15 A statute is void for vagueness under the First and Fifth Amendments when “the person 16 of ordinary intelligence” is not given “a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited”
17 and where application of the law will lead to “arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement.”<sup>10</sup>
18 Here, the statute states “A person shall not intimidate or coerce in any way any person to

22 <sup>7</sup> U.S. v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 461 (2010) (“the First Amendment’s free speech guarantee does not extend only 23 to categories of speech that survive an ad hoc balancing of relative social costs and benefits”); see also Virginia
24 v. Black, 538 U.S. 343, 348 (2003) “(the hallmark of the protection of free speech is to allow ‘free trade in 25 ideas’—even ideas that the overwhelming majority of people might find distasteful or discomfoting.” (Quoting 26 Abrams v. United States, 250 U.S. 616, 630, (1919) (Holmes, J., dissenting))).

27 <sup>8</sup> Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 20 (1971).

28 <sup>9</sup> While the doctrine of vagueness is more commonly applied to criminal or penal statutes, it is also applicable when the statute affects the First Amendment. Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 109 (1972) (“[W]here a vague statute ‘abut(s) upon sensitive areas of basic First Amendment freedoms,’ it ‘operates to inhibit the exercise of (those) freedoms’”).

<sup>10</sup> Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108-09 (1972); see also Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385 (1926) (holding a criminal statute is vague when “men of common intelligence must guess as its meaning”).

1 obtain an abortion.”<sup>11</sup> (Emphasis added). The statute does not specify what it means to 2 “intimidate or coerce” or what conduct constitutes “any way” of so doing. Although the 3 statute’s ostensible purpose is noble—no one should ever be intimidated or coerced into any 4 significant act against their wishes—its mandate is impossible to elucidate.

6 Defendant’s counsel does not routinely ask rhetorical questions in motions, but they 7 seem warranted here. Does expressing a viewpoint about abortion without knowledge of being 8 overheard count as “any way” of intimidating or coercing “any person”? Does it matter 9 whether the person speaking has reason to know “any person” might find their opinion or 10 actions intimidating or coercive? Would handing out pamphlets with information about the 11 possible harm of teen pregnancy constitute intimidation? Does “any person” include someone 12 who is not yet pregnant, or who the speaker does not know is pregnant, or someone who 13 cannot become pregnant at all? Does an actual completed abortion procedure need to take 14 place, or is the mere intimidating or coercive influence sufficiently actionable?
15

17 What if the “intimidation” or “coercion” pertains to a medically necessary procedure, 18 such as a husband pleading with his wife to terminate a pregnancy that will likely kill her if 19 carried to full term? An emotional plea between individuals in their private sphere surely 20 cannot be what the statute hopes to enjoin. Can “a person” intimidate or coerce themselves to 21 obtain an abortion? The statute certainly suggests it is possible with its amazingly broad sweep:
22 it doesn’t say “A person shall not intimidate ... any other person ...”.

25 These questions do not have answers, and that is exactly why the statute must fail. If 26 there is no way for a person to discern what speech or conduct is permitted, then the statute is 27

28 _____
<sup>11</sup> A.R.S. § 36-2153(G).

1 unconstitutionally vague. A statute like this that has interpretations with no discernible
2 standard of conduct is void for vagueness under the First Amendment.<sup>12</sup>

3 The legislative history is similarly ambiguous. Under a section entitled 4 “Miscellaneous,” the statute’s sponsor states the statute, “Stipulates that a person, including a 5 parent or guardian of a minor, shall not coerce in any way a person to obtain an abortion.”<sup>13</sup>

7 The legislative sessions following the statute’s proposal are devoid of any discussion over the 8 meaning of the provision, and the wording of subsection G remains the same in every iteration
9 of the Bill. The term “abortion coercion” has never been used by Arizona courts to Defendant’s
10 knowledge, nor in the Ninth Circuit, or the Supreme Court of the United States.
11

12 Absent an ability to discern the meaning of the statute, individuals are not given a 13 reasonable opportunity to conform their conduct to abide by the statute, and its enforcement is 14 likely to be arbitrary and discriminatory.<sup>14</sup> A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) contravenes the rights of 15 individuals to exercise their right to free speech without restrictions or any semblance of clarity
16 as to what conduct the statute is seeking to deter. A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) is void for vagueness 17 and unconstitutional.
18
19

20 c. A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) is overbroad under the First Amendment.

21 A statute is overbroad when “‘a ‘substantial number’ of its applications are 22 unconstitutional, ‘judged in relation to the statute's plainly legitimate sweep.’”<sup>15</sup>
23
24

25 <sup>12</sup> Connally v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385 (1926).

26 <sup>13</sup> Arizona House Bill Summary, 2009 Reg. Sess. H.B. 2564.

28 <sup>15</sup> Washington State Grange v. Washington State Republican Party, 552 U.S. 442, 449 n. 6 (2008); see also State v. Baldwin, 184 Ariz. 267, 269 (1995) (quoting State v. Jones, 177 Ariz. 94, 99 (App.1993)) (“An overbroad statute is one designed to burden or punish activities which are not constitutionally protected, but ... includes within its scope activities which are protected by the First Amendment.”)

1 A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) does not provide any clarity as to what conduct would constitute a
2 violation nor does the statute define what constitutes as “intimidate or coerce.” Therefore, it
3 must be presumed that the statute applies to any speech related to abortion if the receiver
4 subjectively believes it to be intimidating or coercive. Under this reading, any time a person
5 references, speaks about, acknowledges, etc., abortion, the statute may be triggered. It may be 6 assumed for the sake of the analysis that the “plainly legitimate sweep” of the statute would be 7 physical or violent coercion to obtain an abortion—“terminate your pregnancy or else”—but 8 the broad language surely encapsulates speech or behavior that is not criminal.

11 As such, there are a wide range of conversations that would be considered violative of 12 the statute that are protected by the First Amendment. In particular, the statute could prohibit 13 communication that occurs within the “zone of privacy” protected by the Fourteenth 14 Amendment.<sup>16</sup> The Supreme Court held that there is a protected zone that encompasses the 15 conduct of married and unmarried persons, particularly with decisions regarding family
16 planning, as the “decision whether to bear or beget a child” is a fundamental right.<sup>17</sup> As such,
17 the State action seeking to intervene in the right is subjected to strict scrutiny.<sup>18</sup> Given the 18 overbreadth of the statute at issue, it can be presumed that it would fail to survive strict 19 scrutiny.

25 <sup>16</sup> Griswold v. Connecticut, 318 U.S. 479, 483 (1965) (“[t]he First Amendment has a penumbra where privacy is 26 protected from governmental intrusion.”)

27 <sup>17</sup> Id. at 485 (holding married couples have a right to privacy); Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 453 (1972) (“If 28 the right of privacy means anything, it is the right of the individual, married or single, to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child”).

<sup>18</sup> Griswold v. Connecticut, 318 U.S. 479, 504 (White, J concurring). A statute survives strict scrutiny only when it is narrowly tailored to further a compelling governmental interest.

1 More generally, suppose an individual electronically posts a statement indicating they 2 are pro-choice on social media, and someone who greatly respects their opinion reads the 3 statement and feels pressure to abort their pregnancy unbeknownst to the speaker. Under the 4 statute, any person who comes across the statement and finds it to be intimidating or coercive
5 could assert that they are a victim of “abortion coercion.” Without the ability to discern the 6 meaning of the statute and exclude legitimate permissible conduct from its prohibition, the 7 statute is void for overbreadth and unconstitutional.

10 WHEREFORE, Defendant hereby respectfully requests the following:

- 11 A. That this Court dismiss Plaintiff’s Complaint with regards to the abortion coercion 12 claim with prejudice pursuant to 12(b)(6) or 12(b)(7); in the alternative, that this 13 Court dismiss Plaintiff’s Complaint on the grounds that A.R.S. § 36-2153(G) is 14 unconstitutional;
15
16 B. That this Court award Defendant his attorneys’ fees and costs pursuant to A.R.S. §§ 17 12-341, 12-349; and 18
19 C. That this Court grant such other and further relief as deemed appropriate.

20 RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED this 15th day of February 2022.
